

Patagonia Shuttle

by Maximo Ghioldi

“A unique trip along the Cordigliera of the Andes to the whale's gulf, to the glaciers of the Austral Patagonia and to the Tierra del fuego.”

Individuals tours all year.

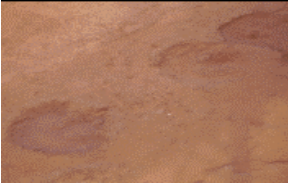

Tours (minimum 6 pass):

- The Peninsula of Valdés and Buenos Aires (9/10 day) from € 2.700,00.
- Argentina from North to South: The Peninsula of Valdés and Puna. (15 day) from € 3.695,00.
- BALLENAS, DINOSAURIOS AND GUANACOS - Peninsula Valdés and Buenos Aires City. (16 day) from € 3.525,00.
- From woods of the Andes to the Austral Argentinean Glaciers of Patagonia, (15 day) from € 3.645,00.
- From Tierra del Fuego to the land of volcanoes, (17 day) from € 3.855,00.
- Following Bruce Chatwin tracks, (18 day) da € 3.965,00.
- Northern Patagonia, glaciers and Ushuaia, (24/25 day) from € 4.915,00.

” Patagonia was there, at last. How many times did I see it in my imagination? How many times did I desire compassionately to visit this lonely desert never stepped upon by men, to rest there far away in its primitive and desolated peace, away from civilization! There it was, completely open before my eyes, that unbroken desert that awakes such bizarre feelings; the ancient house of the giants, whose footsteps on the beach surprised so much Magellan and his men, and generated the name Patagonia”.

Mempo Giardinelli. From the end of the book in Patagonia.

" Patagonia was there, at last. How many times did I see it in my imagination? How many times did I desire passionately to visit this lonely desert never stepped upon by men, to rest there far away in its primitive and desolated peace, away from civilization! There it was, completely open before my eyes, that unbroken desert that awakes such bizarre feelings; the ancient house of the giants, whose footsteps on the beach surprised so much Magellan and his men, and generated the name Patagonia".

William H. Hudson. Idle Days in Patagonia.

"The road straight, grey, dusty, and traffickless. The wind relentless, heading you off. Sometimes you heard a truck, you knew for certain it was a truck, but it was the wind, Or the noise of gears changing down, but that also was the wind. Sometimes the wind sounded like an unloaded truck banging over a bridge. Even if a truck had come up behind you wouldn't have heard it. And even if you'd been downwind, the wind would have drowned the engine."

Bruce Chatwin. En Patagonia.

"... Sheffield arrived on his white horse. He never mounted a horse of different color. Once to the fence he shouted: "Butch! Sun !", and both men, whose names were don Pedro and don Josè, replied in Spanish. At that time, Sheffield started to laugh so loudly that almost fell off the horse. Then they talked in American. We will never know what they said to each other, but they reached an agreement because the telegrams that Sheffield sent between 1902 and 1905 to the Agency Pinkerton insisted on saying: "Argentine is an immense Country, I am on their tracks".

" ... In 1905, an American traveling with the name of Andrew Duffy reached the house of Cholila. In reality, he was Harvey Logan, one of the founders of the wild bunch. Two years earlier, he had left the jail in Knoxville in Tennessee, as he used to do, with his gun, and had ended his escape leaving four more dead bodies for the dogs. That very same year, Butch Cassidy, Etta Place, Sundance Kid and the newcomer robbed the Banca de Sur in the Province of Santa Cruz.

Meanwhile, Sheffield kept writing reports that were never sent to the Agency Pinkerton."

"... Butch and Sundance sold their property of Cholila and traveled further south, toward the extreme limits of the World. They crossed the Magellan's strait and entered the Tierra del Fuego, where they became a legend as two romantic fighters who robbed banks and IRS to support anarchist revolutions."

"... We will never know what the agreements were between Butch Cassidy, Sundance Kid, Etta Place and Martin Sheffield in Cholila's hat, it is likely that part of the money from the robberies were needed to keep quiet the sheriff, who in 1907 bought more than 125,000 acres in the fertile land near El Maiten, in the province of Chabut."

Luis Sepúlveda. In Patagonia, sulle tracce di Butch Cassidy e Sundance Kid.

 Jetset
international travel organization
email: patagonia@viaggijetset.com